CCA is Glasgow’s hub for creative activity. Our year-round programme includes exhibitions, film, music, literature, spoken word, festivals, Gaelic and performance. We have an open-source approach to programming and work with a growing number of partners and individuals to whom we offer space to programme their own events. At the heart of all our activities is the desire to work with artists, generate new projects and present them to the widest possible audience. CCA also produces a range of artist residencies, both in the venue and internationally.

November sees the start of a new CCA exhibition presenting the work of Giles Bailey and Jeremiah Day: look out for the online schedule of their individual performances which are a vital part of their practice.

There will also be a one-off performance by Ruth Barker towards the end of November. There are much anticipated exhibitions coming up in Intermedia too: the first by Michelle Hannah who has her own fascinating relationship with performance; and the second by the Yaka Collective, a seven-strong group of artists who have had a growing impact on Glasgow since their inception in 2014.

This season also sees the next stage of development in CCA’s Cooking Pot programme, exploring local communities’ relationship with food and examining the influence of the city’s many streams of immigration through the recipes and their reflection of many cultures across Glasgow.

There are also some new festivals and a rich mix of independent projects. Distant Voices is a five-day event by Vox Liminis, giving voice through songwriting to prisoners and others affected by the criminal justice system. Blair Cunningham showcases his new book on the rise of community gardens across the city and, as part of the Glasgow Havana Festival, Rebecca Gordon-Nesbitt launches a widely heralded book about the role of arts in the Cuban Revolution. ArtCOP Scotland, a country-wide festival, has a Glasgow hub at CCA and is built around a series of new commissions addressing climate change and sustainable living.

Music this season is a great combination of old and new: Wreckless Eric makes an appearance and Euros Childs too. Supporting a new album, Momentary Masters, Albert Hammond Jr plays in late November.

Glasgow Improvisers Orchestra return for their eighth International Festival with renowned guests such as Keith Tippett, Marilyn Crispell, Maggie Nicols and vibraphonist Corey Mwamba. Besides that brilliant line-up and the Orchestra itself, of course, there is the intriguing announcement that they are going to play work inspired by Noam Chomsky.

Francis McKee, Director
The Shock of Victory is a curated programme consisting of an exhibition, symposium and digital publication. Taking place one year after the Scottish Independence Referendum, the programme proposes artistic approaches, techniques, provocations and motivations in a post-referendum reality departing from Scotland, but certainly not constrained by it.

The programme takes its title from the pivotal essay ‘The Shock of Victory’ from 2007, by anarchist and scholar David Graeber, in which the anti-nuclear movement of the 1970s is understood as a mass movement that achieved little.

The Shock of Victory includes works by In the Shadow of the Hand, an artist duo based in Glasgow consisting of Virginia Hutchison and Sarah Forrest, which allude to an initial inability of response and the materialisation political questioning can become.

Antonis Pittas, a Greek artist living and working in The Netherlands, brings an existing collection work from the Van Abbemuseum into CCA along with new works that undermine notions of display, gestures of the political hand and the recycling of public language.

Artist and poet Alec Finlay is the ‘author’ of a new work: a found poem composed entirely from public responses to the Smith Commission, allowing multiple voices to engage in a complex and conflicted discourse. The resulting document seeks a political settlement beyond conventional political language.

As part of an ongoing endeavour that includes a forthcoming publication on contested modernism in Palestine, Oraib Toukan displays fifty-nine photographs taken of various buildings within the West Bank. Taken over the past few years, the series at first glance look like ordinary buildings in an undefined geographical landscape.

Mairéad McClean’s No More brings us to the Northern Ireland of the early 1970s where the internment policy imprisoned McClean’s father. As an attempt to reclaim the memories of that troubling past, No More shows a bodily response to a political act.

As part of The Shock of Victory, CCA will issue a series of essays, responses and critiques on the larger potential of a post-referendum reality with Michael White, Emma Balkind and Nicholas Laughlin, and Francis McKee’s Something Rich and Strange. All texts will be distributed digitally as PDF and e-reader material on CCA’s website during the exhibition.

CCA presents the work of two artists for whom language is a fundamental preoccupation. In the work of Giles Bailey (1981, UK) and Jeremiah Day (1974, USA), language appears not just as pictures of signs but rather poetics, narrative, description and exposition through words are integrated into visual art practice.

Giles Bailey works largely with performance, writing or strategically appropriating texts that he performs himself. These works are often conceived to propose alternative approaches to the assembling of histories and set archival footage, narrative video or particular images against experiments with language. Increasingly, he works closely with others to facilitate collaborations in order to explore these themes and is developing longer pieces of experimental writing. At the heart of these interests is an abiding preoccupation with conventions and archetypes, why they persist and how we might challenge the thinking that perpetuates them.

Jeremiah Day’s work employs photography, speech, and improvisational movement. In his performances and installations, questions of site and historical memory are explored through fractured narrative and image. In a personal and idiosyncratic form of realism, Day appropriates historical incident to serve as metaphor and exemplification, often drawing on the work of Hannah Arendt to ground this process within a kind of political argumentation.

Presented in juxtaposition and dialogue, the two complimentary but distinct practices will reflect upon each other and offer a glimpse into one of the important currents in contemporary art, namely the return of what was once unfashionable and taboo: narrative.

Giles Bailey studied at the Glasgow School of Art, Royal College of Art and the Piet Zwart Institute in Rotterdam where he received his MFA in 2011. He has presented projects at The Hepworth Wakefield, The Chisenhale Gallery, Transmission Gallery, The Stedelijk Museum Amsterdam, Kunsthalle Basel, Etablissement d’en Face Brussels and CAGE, New York.

Jeremiah Day graduated from the art department of the University of California at Los Angeles in 1997 and lived and worked in Los Angeles until moving to Holland in 2003 to attend the Rijksakademie. From 2000 to 2002, Day was artist-in-residence at Beyond Baroque Literary Arts Center in Los Angeles where he organised such events as The Great Silence: 10 Years After the Burning, commemorating the 1992 riots.

CCA’s publication is dedicated to creative and experimental writing in contemporary art. 2HB focuses on creative writing or fiction with a critical awareness of issues.

CCA invites you to join in with Cooking Pot, a new project which will build a community of people who are passionate about food – making, sharing, eating and enjoying. In September and October, our Cooking Pot programme started with a reflection on the multiculturalism present within Glasgow and its food. By pulling together the culinary knowledge offered by Glaswegian local, permanent and temporary communities we discovered more about the cultures we share here in the city.

For November and December, we look at community-based food experiences, issues of food poverty, and food-inspired memories. This programme of events has many sources of inspiration, including the Garnethill International Cooking Pot recipe book. The book was a collection of recipes contributed by the local community and published in 1976 by CCA’s predecessor The Third Eye Centre and the residents of Garnethill. The book was based in the local community with a strong international input to the recipes. With thanks to John Kraska for his memories of that project.

Distant Voices is a new festival exploring crime and punishment through music, writing and film.

Over the last eighteen months Vox Liminis has created spaces for musicians to support songwriting involving prisoners and others within or affected by the criminal justice system. Distant Voices is your chance to see these songs performed live, to hear from some of our country’s best known crime writers, to view and discuss a documentary about how people move on from crime and punishment, and even to write your own songs in response.

In a system often reduced to black and white positions and roles, Distant Voices explores what happens when we share human stories, ideas and emotions.
The nineteenth UK Jewish Film Festival comes to Glasgow and four other cities across the UK. The festival is delighted to bring you an exciting and varied range of feature and documentary films from Britain and around the world that celebrate the creativity and diversity of Jewish culture.

From the charming new British comedy Dough starring Jonathan Pryce and Pauline Collins, to the unexpected world of a marginal Moroccan Jewish community in Encirclements, and the attempt to create and reassess Jewish-Polish relations in the extraordinary documentary Raise the Roof, there is something for everyone in this selection.
The eighth International GIOfest premieres six new works and features Marilyn Crispell from New York with Keith Tippett, performing together in a new piece devised by George Burt. Also appearing is the inspirational Maggie Nicols and virtuoso vibraphonist Corey Mwamba who will lead a public workshop. Other premieres include an improvised requiem, collaborations with dancers and visual artists, and work inspired by Noam Chomsky. This combination of striving to develop new ways of working, composing, performing and thinking about music while celebrating community, friendship and distributed creativity is a hallmark of GIO’s approach.

The festival will take their practice into new areas while welcoming world-leading musicians who also happen to be great friends, as well as wonderfully big-hearted and generous people.
This December CCA will become Glasgow’s hub for a brand new Scotland-wide arts festival featuring commissions, performances and events which respond to climate change and imagine more sustainable futures and ways of living.

With newly devised work from performance aficionados The Royal Conservatoire of Scotland, a night of climate change theatre with playwriting veterans Stage to Page, and a curated programme of performance and film from UNFIX, there is plenty on offer to satisfy your artistic desires. We’ll see young people taking the stage with performances from Firefly Youth Arts and students of Govan High School with artist Ailie Rutherford. Space for debate will also be made including the launch of the Radical Renewable Art & Activism Fund (RRAAF) with artist Ellie Harrison.

A large print version of this brochure is available from the CCA box office.
In 2005 CCA signed an agreement with the Conseil des arts et des lettres du Québec (CALQ, a Quebec equivalent to Creative Scotland) to launch a residency exchange programme. A decade later, that programme remains an important international link for both sides. The original brief for the residency targeted artists in the fields of ‘contemporary music (instrumental, electroacoustic and electronic music), sound installation, audio art, media arts, multidisciplinary arts and visual arts … in which the candidates rely primarily on the new technologies.’ At that time, Montreal was known as a centre for new media and electronic music, fuelled partly by the impact of the establishment of the Daniel Langlois Foundation in 1997 which offered awards globally to encourage art and science collaborations.

Stemming from these electronic-focused origins, the residencies have often concentrated on music, sound art and video, though not exclusively. The Scotland-based artists who are invited to Montreal work there through the agency of PRIM (Productions Réalisations Indépendantes de Montréal), a digital production house with a wide array of facilities. At CCA the residents work mainly from our artist’s flat using rooms and technical facilities as they need them. Each residency lasts for three months, generally from April to June, and both are funded by CCA and CALQ.

This may all sound a little bureaucratic but once the paperwork is out of the way the residencies provide a really exciting opportunity for artists. On the first residency, Zoe Irvine was the Scottish artist selected to go to Quebec. She had proposed a project based to some extent on her interest in The Idea of North, a radio broadcast by Canadian pianist Glenn Gould. This was possible within the residency, a fact that still seems surprising today. In 2007 Rob Kennedy and Peter Dowling produced Hapless, Helpless and Hopeless at PRIM – a film that samples TV footage to create a new visual grammar for the medium.

The residency offers similar vistas of potential from the other direction. The composer, Emily Doolittle, came to Glasgow for three months in 2007 and that experience helped network her into a series of collaborations that continued to bear fruit since then. Now she lives in Glasgow and her first CD, all spring, has just been released this year.

Our 2015 resident artist from Quebec explored ambivalence by creating illustrated responses to the personal messages she receives from strangers online under the pseudonym Ambivalently Yours. One of the final entries in her residency blog gives a good description of a long stay in CCA’s artist’s flat:

Tonight I took all of my drawings off the walls of the artist flat. The space suddenly seems bigger/emptier. All of my work is in a small pile in a corner of the room, ready to be shipped home. It looks so small, over 100 drawings, 89 days of work… 2 days left.

I can hear the high pitch sound of the building alarm being set, in a few moments I will be the only one here. Well, me and my person, who’s been asleep for hours. I will miss these sounds when I get home. The sound of the radiators at 2:07am, the sounds of alcohol-induced debauchery at the bar across the street on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, the faint sounds of bagpipes in the distance (seems clichéd, I know, but I hear them often).
Looking back over the list of Scotland-based artists who have been on the residency it charts an interesting line through the very recent history of sound art and film-making in the country. The list to date includes:

2015: Ailie Robertson / Ambivalently Yours
2014: Marcin Knyziak / Maryse Larivièrè
2013: Raydale Dower / Dominique Sirois
2012: Charlotte Prodger / Marilou Lemmens
2011: Sheena Marie MacDougall / Phyllis Katrapani
2010: Luke Collins / Gabriel Coutu-Dumont
2009: Rob Kennedy / Patrick Saint Denis
2008: Mark Vernon / Martine Crispo
2007: Peter Dowling / Emily Doolittle
2006: Zoe Irvine / Chantal Dahan

Our resident artist from Quebec for 2016 has already been chosen and it is Marie-Andrée Pellerin. The call for Scottish-based applications for the residency is open now; more details are on p9 of this brochure.
